SITE DESCRIPTION: The foundations and lower section of some walls of a small two room house with central corridor and rear skillion section. The building is located on the crest of the hill with commanding views in all directions. The front of the building is oriented away from the view. The form of the building appears to have been that of a house with a central doorway and one window on each side. There are the remains of two chimneys to the side, one to the main room and one to the skillion (kitchen). The stonework was random rubble rendered internally and externally. There is no evidence of verandahs.
HISTORY: The history of the building is unknown, local sources believe it be the watch house, but the reserve is near the intersection of Carlton Road and the plan does not relate to this BOUNDARY:
COMMENTS: The ruin has significance as an indicator of early development in the area in a prominent location. It illustrates early stone construction, the importance of siting buildings in the landscape and is potentially an archaeological site of value. Future research may lend insight to the function of the structure.
